Hello, and welcome!

Studying history can be like travel across time and space. This is true even when you study the history of your own country. It can seem like a completely different world than where you currently live. To understand history, you must be able to relate to the people who lived in that time and place. You need to examine the decisions they made. You must understand their daily lives and the relationships they had. That can make studying history feel more like studying anthropology or sociology. There are so many different perspectives!

We invite you to take a minute to learn about the course by reviewing the information below. This way, you will be better able to understand the expectations of the course as a whole. Then you can determine how to manage your time and efforts as you navigate through it.

Are you ready to take a whirlwind trip from its earliest beginnings all the way to the late 20th century? It is sure to be an adventure!
Course Description and Competencies

What to Expect
This course is organized into four modules. Each module covers a specific timeframe of U.S. history. And each module is broken down into a number of units. The units are the basic building blocks of the course. Within each unit you will find:

- An introduction to the unit
- A textbook chapter based upon American Yawp
- Hyperlinks in the text to supplementary videos, interactive timelines, and maps
- Knowledge Checks to help you verify your progress
- Primary Sources, which are documents from people who witnessed the history
- A conclusion to the unit
- Flash cards of important events, terms, and people to help you study
- A Reflection question to help you think about the main theme of the unit

Additionally, each module includes:

- A practice module quiz
- A module quiz that will be assessed

Lastly, there is a midterm, which covers the first two modules. And there is a final, which covers the last two modules.

By the end of this course, you will be able to:

1. Identify the social, political, and economic organization of the British colonies.
2. Identify the major causes and outcomes of the American Revolution.
3. Identify slavery and territorial expansion as causes of the Civil War.
4. Recognize the changing nature of freedom in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.
5. Explain the evolving role of the United States in the world.
6. Describe the diverse social and cultural issues of the late 20th century.

The objective assessment allows you to demonstrate three core competencies from the course. You will have two attempts to pass the exam.
